Photo : Kevin Winter (Getty Images) Today is a good day for marijuana fans. At long last, the state of Colorado will be able to reap financial benefits from their own cannabis industry. Last week, voters decided to tax weed, and their voters approved a ballot initiative they called Amendment 64. Now those who support it will not only help fund their own burgeoning industry, but be able to receive a tax cut as well. According to the Denver Post, "Colorado voters on Tuesday approved Amendment 64, which will legalize recreational marijuana and establish a system of taxation and regulation that legalizes the cultivation, production, sale and use of the drug," after becoming concerned about the way state revenue was being handled. Voters were encouraged to vote in favor of the initiative by strategists who felt the state was just one of the many that didn't, or couldn't, tax marijuana the same as alcohol. "It's time to take control of the industry and start to control the flow of revenue," Ethan Nadelmann, founder and executive director of the Drug Policy Alliance, said. In a statement, Colorado Chief Justice Michael Mullarkey warned voters against "putting too much marijuana in the hands of consumers," but also acknowledged that he was open to a marijuana tax, but it needed to be "very well thought out," according to the Denver Post. I'm still unclear why it needs to be thought out—out of a million state-regulated products on the shelves, a tax on something is just a tax. Regardless, marijuana has always been different, despite what the liquor and tobacco industries are claiming now. While it is a federally illegal substance and has been for almost 80 years now, the U.S. government has done a terrible job of taking advantage of it's illegal status. It comes as no surprise that some in the medical marijuana industry are concerned about the forthcoming legalization of cannabis, considering how much money they've lost to the federal government through dubious "research"—most of which occurred as late as the last years of the George W. Bush administration. In 2015, federal authorities raided a lab in San Francisco that was allegedly producing CBD oil—an ingredient in marijuana that has been shown to be a natural anti-inflammatory. Now, CBD oil is going to be legal and CBD itself is going to be taxed. While
