Histamine is the major mediator of immediate hypersensitivity. In 22 infants and children aged 1-7 years with mild bronchial asthma (BA), we examined the kinetics of histamine release induced by an oral allergen in vivo and the possible relationship between in vivo and in vitro histamine release reactions. Blood samples were drawn simultaneously from the cubital vein and the intradermal vein during the histamine-release testing in the oral allergen provocation test. Histamine levels in the blood drawn from the cubital vein rose promptly after oral allergen challenge, but the levels of histamine in the blood drawn from the intradermal vein did not increase significantly. The levels of histamine in the blood drawn from the cubital vein correlated significantly with the intradermal levels of histamine. In young children with BA, the blood histamine levels in the cubital vein may reflect their allergic reaction in the periumbilical skin, especially in the periumbilical cutaneous area. With the rapid development of science and technology, a large number of equipment in our daily life has incorporated the touch control functionalities, which makes the user's operation easier and more efficient. However, traditional touch control and remote controller technologies are often too complex or provide insufficient functions, which affects the popularization of the touch control and remote controller. A key way to reduce a cost of the above-mentioned equipment is to simplify the hardware design and Mozilla this is good news, it's a few month late. But good: I expect an Apple firefox update soon. ----- mechanical_fish As I interpret the linked announcement, the real news is not the actual release of Firefox, but the recent security audit of Mozilla's software. The audit found plenty of bugs but the application itself was found to be very solid, and the audit report notes that the audit was in response to a recent rash of bogus security advisories issued by an insecure browser. The audit found some more serious defects that were deemed "urgent", but it is important to remember that they are _not_ the same as the 60-80 bugs that the audit found. ----- tlrobinson This is the third version of Firefox 6.0. Q: Python unittest coverage reports in a "capable of compiling" setup I'm using python's unittest with nose as my testing framework. I want to test my code by running a coverage tool (like coverage.py) and get a report. The problem is that my code can't be compiled before the tests are run. My 'test_runner.py
