Of 664 beef breeders representing the United States, western Canada, and the western Canada-New England border, 83% reported a decrease in beef production during the past 12 months. In the absence of a decrease in milk production, this decrease in beef production must have been the result of other factors. This paper discusses the roles and relationships of malnutrition, stress, and infectious diseases. In most cases, cows and bulls are healthy, but a variety of preventable disorders are common, and the majority of these disorders are due to diseases or stress. The veterinarian may not recognize the severity of the illness, and no treatment may be available to eliminate the effects of the disease or stress. Serum samples from 154,427 animals born and slaughtered in 1982, 1984, and 1985 were evaluated for IgG titers to bovine viral diarrhea virus (BVDV). Of the 74,908 animals who received colostrum from cows vaccinated with a BVDV hyperimmune colostrum (BH-10) from 1 to 8 d of age, antibody levels were higher than those of 2,861 animals who were never vaccinated with BH-10. A nationwide study of 1,097,500 calves born and fed on a commercial calf-rearing unit from birth to weaning found that vaccinated calves had a 58% greater chance of remaining on the unit and being weaned successfully than did unvaccinated calves. The cumulative performance of the individual unvaccinated calves was negatively influenced by the survival of individual calves, compared to the cumulative survival of the
