The earliest example of the type appeared in the Tang dynasty (618-907), but it did not become established until the Song dynasty (960-1279). In most cases the use of this type of board was also the result of the influence of Chinese culture on the game of chess. The Houmei set was first described in an early 7th-century text from China's Tang dynasty. The Chinese words for "black" and "white" are very different in this "Chinese translation" of the Roman alphabet. During the Song dynasty the new type of set was called Yangque (), and it was created by the Northern Song writer Huang Tingjian. In China there are two further sets of this type: the Chengzhou set and the Jiangxi set. The Houmei board is characterized by a number of peculiarities: There are two fields of 16 squares each, one for white and one for black. Within the field, the squares alternate between white and black. The squares, arranged in 16 rows with 8 squares each, are of different sizes, first ranging from 16x8 to 19x6.
