When the checkbox is selected, the visibility of the buttons should change. If the checkbox is unselected, the visibility of the buttons should return to normal. I also have an imageview. When the imageview is clicked, the visibility of the buttons should also change. How do I achieve this using Android? A: Check out the following links for a general example of how to toggle visibility of Buttons. There are many ways to do what you want, but the general idea is very similar: What is the easiest way to toggle button visibility in android Android: How to toggle button visibility using on/off state Android: Toggle Button Visibility For this particular example, there are a couple ways to implement the check box and the Button. Checkbox (with On/Off state): Create a CheckBox like so: Next, create a function that toggles the visibility of the Button. The visibility is toggled from an `onCheckedChangeListener` of the `CheckBox`.

CheckBox checkBox; Button button; @Override protected void onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); setContentView(R.layout.activity_main); checkBox = (CheckBox) findViewById(R.id.checkBox); button = (Button) findViewById(R.id.button); checkBox.setOnCheckedChangeListener(new OnCheckedChangeListener() { @Override public void onCheckedChanged(CompoundButton buttonView, boolean isChecked) { if(isChecked){

Will all of them execute sequentially or are they queued and executed once the previous action has been completed? A: Yes, the browser will queue the clicks and only execute the last one it sees. So, in this example: click The onclick handler for the button will be called in the order you give them in. So, it would appear that the following would occur: The browser will execute the first two handlers, alert('a') and alert('b') The first alert would fire before it was replaced by the second, and finish with no errors. The second alert will fire, then finish with no errors. The button is now in the disabled state. The browser is still doing the first two alerts. The first two alerts will finish with no errors. The browser will replace the button with the third alert handler, which has a display of none. The third alert will fire, but before it is displayed, the browser will replace it with the fourth handler, alert('c'). The fourth alert will fire. The button is now in the disabled state. A: Yes, the order in which the handlers are
